ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

Softball is my life. Many people say that, but for me I'm still learning about the sport and it is still teaching me many lessons about life. One of the many lessons I have learned is to let the past be the past, though to this day I'm still working on letting go and moving on. Mistakes are something everyone makes, and I've made a lot but the most important thing about making mistakes is learning from them especially in softball. The reason I love and play this sport is because it made me a better person, and continues to be something reliable. The best thing I did for myself was deciding to give softball a chance because after I stepped on the field, I received a new home. The amount of work and dedication it takes to play a sport was something I never expected nor did I expect myself to actually find a passion I never want to quit. I'm willing to learn more about this sport and the lessons it teaches in life. Even though I haven't been playing softball for as long as others I am fascinated by how quickly it took over my life, and how much I can analyze the sport and recognize mistakes. I hope for the future I can continue to grow not only as a player, but work to be a better person as well.
